Since the first EU-Africa Summit in Cairo, 2000, strategic partnership between the EU and the AU in the fields of peace and security has increased. Both the EU and the AU highlighted the importance of keeping peace and security, and decided to enhance relationships in a wide range of activities in particular, in the area of conflict prevention and resolution. This book explores strategic partnership between the two important global actors in the areas of peace and security and discusses the questions of why the EU strengthened its strategic partnership with the AU after 2000 and why the EU shifted its foreign and security policy towards Africa.
